Margret Paida Moyo

Director, Little Blackwood Farm

Margret Paida Moyo is a 27-year-old farmer from Zimbabwe. She ventured into agriculture full-time in 2019 and registered her company to treat farming as a business.

Margret is a cofounder and director at Little Blackwood Farm, where she and three other cofounders have set up a vibrant agribusiness enterprise that specializes in horticulture, project management and consultancy. In 2019 she was awarded the Entrepreneur of the Year by STAR Leadership Academy for Agriculture.

Her company, Little Blackwood Farm, grows horticultural crops including potatoes, tomatoes, cabbages, beans, and maize, as well as chickens at a commercial scale. The company also offers consultancy services to young emerging farmers and schools.

Margret recently launched a student farmer club which focuses on mentorship of students in universities and colleges who want to venture into farming. The club also helps to bridge the information gap between schools and the real agricultural industry students are taken to different companies in the sector and they familiarize with their future employers. The club plays a role in helping students to get internship placements as well at different farms and companies.
